5. Pursuing excellence in education.

About the Event:

At the turn of the 19th century, exclusive fashion houses in Europe, distinctly Paris and London, were using formal presentations to showcase their latest line to clientele. One of the most notable designers of this concept, Charles Fredrick Worth, gained traction by displaying clothes on actual people instead of mannequins. American retailers imported the concept of the fashion show in the early 1900s. The first American fashion show likely took place in 1903 in the New York City store of the Ehrlich Brothers. Fashion shows are a way of life to many people as well and set the tone for each year. People who come and watch the shows also get to experience an art form with their own eyes and be present in the industry. Fashion shows have changed through the digital area and the pandemic accelerated the course of becoming digital.

Objectives:

- More than just showcasing the designers' piece of work, a fashion show is a chance for them to display a particular aesthetic. This is higher and more conceptual than one may surmise.
- A fashion show is a way to attempt to make a big statement to the common lot. The goal is to make an impression on the audience and to get people talking about it.
- It is also through this that the designers express their creative skills and talent in designing various types of dresses and clothes. Thus, exposing their talents and giving them an opportunity to promote their creations.
- It is moreover crucial for fashion designers to remain in lime light for continuing their business and to demand high prices for the designed clothes.

Target Audience:

Bonafide students of college / universities / institutions at undergraduate or postgraduate levels.
